Also, L-citrulline can be synthesized from the conversion of L-arginine to nitric oxide in a reaction catalyzed by nitric oxide synthase enzymes. Importantly, oral L-citrulline, unlike oral L-arginine, bypasses the hepatic [liver] metabolism and is not catabolized by arginase enzymes, thus allowing it to be transported to the kidneys where approximately 80% of L-citrulline is converted into plasma arginine by the cells of the proximal tubules. The beneficial effects of citrulline malate may actually be attributed to the synergistic combination of both L-citrulline and malate at the muscles' metabolic level
